

Reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP): devastating verdict by Institute for European Environmental Policy (IEEP). CAP's environmental ambition (as proposed by the European Commission) about to be dismantled

The IEEP, one of the leading European sustainability think tanks, has undertaken an assessment of Agriculture Ministers' and European Parliaments political deal struck so far on the future of the Common Agricultural Policy", delivering a devastating verdict:

Out of six essential elements for keeping the CAP's environmental ambition alive, Ministers' and Parliament's positions undermine 4 out of the 6 points, while the other 2 do not contain sufficient safeguards to firmly preserve or build on the environmental and climate proposals put forward by the European Commission. on the political deal struck so far
